

Kheya Ganguly, brings a wealth of personal and professional experience to the table. She is an experienced teacher and trainer and has worked with all age groups. She created curriculum for teachers, parents, medical and education professionals and courses for both undergraduate and graduate students. Kheya is a passionate advocate for diversity, equity, and inclusion as well as creating locally sourced food systems, social justice, professional ethics and women's studies. Kheya has experience in higher education working as a writing tutor, academic advisor, financial aid and scholarship consultant, as well as experience teaching undergraduate courses in Counseling and Human Development.

A Graduate of the University of South Florida, Kheya has a Masters in Curriculum and Instruction. She is the recipient of an ALANA award recognizing excellence as a minority student and a University Fellowship for academic achievement. Her research interests include Education, Human Sexuality, Psychology, Women's Studies, and Child Development. Born in India, and raised in both India and the United States, she has traveled extensively over the world. She speaks Bengali and English.

